From the Eradicate Scrapie! Information Initiative

Revised and Updated Vet Guide Re-issued as a CD

Colorado Springs, Colorado—The very popular “A Guide to the National Scrapie Eradication Program for Veterinarians” has been revised, updated, and made available as a compact disc (CD) as part of the Eradicate Scrapie! Information Initiative, conducted by the National Institute for Animal Agriculture (NIAA) on behalf of the U.S. Department of Agriculture’s Animal and Plant Health Inspection Service/Veterinary Services.

“The revised version contains the latest information on various new aspects of the National Scrapie Eradication Program (NSEP) so that veterinarians can provide up-to-date, accurate information to their clients,” according to Dr. Diane Sutton, DVM and NSEP national coordinator.

It also contains considerably more information than the original print version, such as procedures for collecting and submitting samples for testing, including collection of the brainstem utilizing the scoop technique, rectal and eyelid biopsies, and genotyping.

The veterinarian guide is also available at www.eradicatescrapie.org in PDF format for downloading onto a CD or as a printed version.

NIAA is dedicated to programs that work towards the eradication of diseases that pose risk to the health of animals, wildlife and humans; promote a safe and wholesome food supply for our nation and abroad; and promote the best practices in environmental stewardship, animal health and well being. NIAA members include producers, veterinarians, animal scientists, researchers, state and federal officials, and agribusiness executives. Additional information is available at www.animalagriculture.org.
